Rob Mancini is a versatile artist based in Melbourne, Australia who has had an extensive career working as an artist/illustrator and graphic designer, for the general design and publishing industries internationally as well as creating personal works. He draws his influences from a diverse and broad range of visual imagery and physical environments.

He is passionate about the conservation of shrinking habitats, particularly wetlands and the biodiversity that inhabit them. He has worked on numerous natural history publishing and conservation projects and has had a lifelong love of nature. He has over his career won a number of major awards exhibiting with Australian wildlife art societies.

"Hopefully if I can halt the viewer long enough to create awareness of what exists in these places and the value of working to ensure their continued existence, our important interconnection, man is nature, nature is man.”
